FOR LONDON,
CALLING AT THE CAPE FOR COAL ONLY.

THE A. 1. Steam-ship SCOTLAND, Captain MILLMAN.

This vessel, nearly new, and specially adapted for carrying valuable Cargo, has all the qualities of a Clipper-ship in addition to her Steam-power.

The Owner's instructions require a resort to steam whenever the wind shall be too light to admit of a speed of five knots. To this end the ship will carry 250 tons of coal from this port, and will replenish at the Cape. It is therefore expected that she will make a very short passage to England, as her past performances have demonstrated the advantage of the auxiliary power.

The vessel is now open to public inspection, and Captain MILLMAN will readily furnish any information required concerning her capabilities.

For Freight or Passage apply to Kiying.—We are as yet unable to lay before our readers a translation of the Imperial Decree condemning Kiying to death. The following abstract of its contents has been communicated to us. On his disappearance from Tien-tsin on the 13th June, Kiying was immediately denounced by the Emperor's uncle and other high officers who had first recommended the Emperor to raise him from his disgrace and employ him at Tien-tsin as a man well versed in barbarian affairs. These worthies moved his Majesty to cause him to be beheaded in the camp at Tung-chau, ten miles from Peking, where a large force was known to be awaiting the possible advance of the barbarian forces. The Emperor remarking severely on his desertion of his post, by which "Kiying had certainly hastened his end," took the chief blame of employing one so cowardly and incompetent on himself; still he thought public opinion would demand the infliction of some punishment on the officials who had been his sponsors. The proper courts were accordingly to fine or degrade them, and Kiying himself was to be handed over to a high tribunal composed, as the circumstances of his case required, of various courts. They sentenced him to death, as it would seem by the loss of his head; this not contenting the Emperor, the case was reheard apparently before the same judges assisted by two younger brothers of the Emperor, and it is on the receipt of their report that he publishes a Decree in autograph, the substance of which is as follows.

The princes aforesaid had found that Kiying, in quitting his post without the orders of the Emperor, had acted with stupidity and precipitancy, and accordingly sentenced him to be detained in prison till the great assize at which a number of sentences are annually submitted to the Throne to be mitigated or confirmed; it being provided that Kiying's was to be among the latter. In other words he was reprieved for a definite period. The award is a good one, but not so the finding, as it does not sufficiently make plain the villainy of the culprit. The task of exposing this consequently devolves on the Emperor himself.

Kiying was restored to office, though under a sentence of punishment, in the hope that he might do such service as would redeem his declining years. His language when he took leave of his Majesty was not such as to induce suspicion that he was past a sense of duty or that his intelligence was impaired. He said he hardly felt equal to the post, but that he would see what his future was like. And he proceeded to Tien-tsin. On the 8th June, orders were sent him to hold himself perfectly free of the other commissioners Kweiliang and Hwashana; he was to have scope for his own views, and if he saw fit to carry out "the other policy." Thus, beyond dispute, he was armed with independent powers, and he received all possible support. Kweiliang and his colleague requested his removal; the Emperor knew he must be aware of this, and lest he should feel embarrassed by the knowledge, again sent him orders to remain at Tien-tsin. Such treatment should have pricked his conscience and stimulated his energies. Kiying, however, sets out for Peking on the pretence of having some important matter to communicate. If he had, he might have written a confidential despatch in his single name. His plea is that the matter could not be committed to paper. Yet on receiving further orders to remain at Tien-tsin he is in a great hurry to prepare another memorial. But neither in this, nor in any of his memorials, nor in his defence, does he bring forward any suggestion of value. His one thought seems to be the safety of his own neck. Now had his information, all along, been less exact, his dearth of practical suggestions might seem over hardly dealt with; but he knew that what he did suggest had already been under consideration. What another might have proposed without blame, too, it was culpable in him to propose, for he was long in the secret; he was besides free to act for himself; but, though without a policy, either of prevention or cure, while considering the question before them with his colleagues, he is ready with the right measure only after the event. He then flies, and applies to the Emperor to punish him for quitting his post. What is worst is that he not only (assumes, or) endeavours to make out that his past offence is atoned for, but that he also throws the blame upon others. Had the Emperor been beguiled by him into punishing him with dismissal as he requested, he would have made his way home to enjoy himself. Should such an idea have been tolerable to one so many years in the public service?

Nor is this all. He represents that after consenting to write a communication (to one of the foreign ministers,) he and his colleagues in dread of the Emperor's displeasure gave themselves up for lost and wept the entire day. Why did he not in virtue of the powers vested in him, take a line of his own? Then he pretended to Hwashana that he was reluctant to leave Tien-tsin, and that lest the people should be alarmed at his sudden departure he would give out that he was only going away for a while and on business. Yet on receiving the Emperor's commands to return he discovered no haste to obey; he made all speed to take himself out of the way; he set the Imperial Decree utterly at nought. Such intrigues, such deceit, put him beyond defence; he deserves annihilation, house and man.

Still the earlier award of the Emperor's uncle and his colleagues, under which he would have been executed summarily was over severe. So is that since pronounced by the Censorate. The Emperor has had him tried by the high functionaries before whom he had been summoned that the public might be edified by their declaration of a sentence commensurate with his offence, when this had been duly investigated. The report (of the censor) urges that if he be not executed at once, his death in the ordinary course of nature, which cannot be far distant, may enable him to escape with his head; a form of words applicable to baser malefactors, but not to Kiying. After many days deliberation the Emperor has satisfied himself that his life cannot be spared, and, feeling that if he be reprieved, as the princes, his brothers, recommend, until the great assize, he, the Emperor, will not have the heart to let him die the death of a common criminal, his Majesty has determined on sending two high officers of the Court specially charged with all matters affecting members of the Imperial Clan, together with the President of the Board of Punishments, to the Clan Prison, there to communicate this decree to Kiying, and at the same time to inform him that it is the Imperial pleasure that he put an end to himself; that his Majesty's high purpose to be at once just and gracious may be made manifest. "Respect this!"

The Decree here paraphrased was published in the Gazette of the 1st July. The sentence may be mercy to a Chinese subject as compared with either of those it enables him to escape, but its justice will hardly be complete in the eyes of any European who reads the evidence. There must be more behind in the nature of a charge on public grounds than the words of the Decree itself declare, or there must be some private reason for punishing Kiying's withdrawal from his post with a degree of severity which to us appears greatly in excess of that offence. One thing is clear; the Emperor sent him out with powers to pursue a line of his own, and he had hardly started when there was conferred on him the honorary title of lieutenant-general. This was in the same Gazette which made the Mongolian prince, Sangkolinsin, an Imperial Commissioner. This prince is a warrior of distinction and commanded the camp before alluded to as having been formed outside Peking. It is equally certain, as has before been stated, that from the moment of Kiying's arrival at Tien-tsin the other commissioners shewed a disposition to recede from the engagements on which they were about to enter; and that, as the above Decree shews, they presently solicited Kiying's removal from the commissionership. The Chinese explain those ambiguous words in which the Emperor abuses Kiying's policy as impracticable, and in him above all men as without excuse, to mean that he, knowing our power in war, and knowing that a war policy had been proposed and rejected, did notwitstanding recommend war. We can hardly refrain, nevertheless, from inferring that the military title conferred on him did argue some encouragement of such a proposition. But, that he should have set his experience of barbarian arms at defiance is farther explained, say the Chinese, by the fact that his assertions regarding our prowess had been most angrily commented on in the Decree of 1850 which degraded him; he therefore, true to his old character, had sought to propitiate his sovereign by unsaying that which had formerly offended him. This, again, we should have supposed, was allowing his subservience to triumph over his better knowledge with his eyes fully open to the disastrous consequences of provoking us to hostilities; but Chinese gossip again faces this difficulty by asserting that it was never his intention to do more than unseat his colleagues, and then, left to himself, to pacify the barbarian as he flattered himself he well knew how. It is certain that he had sent for Hwang Antung, his Secretary of Legation at Nanking, and subsequently Governor, under him, of Kwang-tung; also for Châu Chang-ling, another of his old staff. It is alleged that the Commissioners Kweiliang and Hwashana early took part against him as a man calculated to damage the interests of peace. Whether this was before or after the production of one of his memorials taken amongst Yeh's papers we cannot aver, but their anxiety to be rid of him on such ground would not be lessened by their knowledge of the part the Emperor shews he was taking against them. There is one point more not to be overlooked. Since this reign began the tide of court favor has set strong against him, and it is whispered that his resuscitation and re-employment in barbarian affairs was with a fixed purpose to destroy him, either as a man long obnoxious to the Emperor, or as one whose coffers had been well filled during his four years' government of the Two Kwang; and that it was to this end that he was commissioned in a form which tempted if it did not oblige him to differ in limine from his colleagues.

We give these speculations for what they may be worth. The fate of Kiying is not affected by them, and about its certainty at Tien-tsin there appeared little doubt. The Gazette containing the Decree has not reached us down here, and some Chinese are still inclined to doubt its existence.

The ships of war lately in the Gulf of Pecheli, of which a list has been given in this journal during the last three months, have all, or nearly so, been dispersed. There were thirty five belonging to the English and French squadrons, from the Second rate, of 84 guns, to the tiny, but puissant, Gun-boat of 2, besides some four or five others under neutral flags. Our shipping list now contains two thirds of them. When the Primauguet left, there only remained H. I. M. S. Nemesis and Phlégéton and H. M. S. Fury. The Hesper left here for the Gulf on the 10th, taking coal to supply those who required it to help them on their way down against the monsoon. The Calcutta, with Rear-Admiral Sir Michael Seymour, is on her way to the Ruggeds, where the Coromandel, tender, awaits His Excellency and will, it is believed, bring him up to Shanghai. The Inflexible left yesterday for that anchorage to meet the Admiral and receive instructions as to her destination. The Pique is on her way to Hongkong from whence she will go home, expecting to arrive and be paid off in January next. On the Admiral's arrival it will be decided which of the vessels will accompany His Excellency, Lord Elgin, who waits here for the next inward mail, to Japan, with the Yacht to be presented to the Emperor. The rest of the squadron will proceed to Hongkong and Canton where their presence will be needed.

The evacuation of the Pei-ho and the Gulf of Pecheli, by the allied forces must have been a relief to the Court of Peking such as probably has never been felt by the present dynasty. The victim of the Inquisition would scarcely feel more alleviation to his sufferings at the temporary intermission of the screw, or the condemned criminal more joy at a reprieve, than would His Imperial Majesty on obtaining, even at so great sacrifice, a twelve months respite. That he hoped, to the last moment, some turn of fortune would assist him or, by gaining time, he might make another stand for his imagined omnipotence we do not doubt, and when the determined attitude of the allies bereaved him of that hope he sought refuge in the self-delusion that twelve months would evolve events which may enable him to evade the fulfilment of his obligations in their full integrity.

Under this conviction we expect it will be necessary, when the appointed Ministers shall proceed to Peking with the ratified treaties to carry into effect that most important of their provisions—their permanent residence in the Capital, they will require to be backed by an imposing force to produce that moral effect which may obviate the necessity of resort to the ultima ratio.

We hope, in the meantime there will be a complete survey made of all Coasts and places to which foreign vessels will resort in the North,—China, Corea, Japan. The season is now favorable and if two surveying vessels were at once placed upon that service, the Admiralty Charts might be out by the time they will be wanted.

The U. S. steam-frigate Minnesota, arrived on the 11th inst. from the Gulf of Pecheli, having on board H. E. Mr. Reed, the American Minister, and his suite. The Minnesota left the Gulf on the 6th, and Commodore Tattnall the day before in the Powhatan for Nagasaki, where he expected to meet the Mississippi, and then proceed to Hakodadi, to remain while the Powhatan refitted her machinery.

H. I. M. S. Audacieuse, Capt. Vrignaud, arrived from the Gulf of Pecheli on the 17th inst., having on board His Excellency, le Baron Gros, Ambassador of France, and Suite.

THE CANTON PEOPLE
YEH MINGCHIN.

Myriads and myriads of the people of Canton,—in a word all the gentry of the province,—have united in a memorial to the Emperor, condemnatory of the fallen minister. The memorial is a long and circumstantial one, and very patriotic in its way. After a rather tedious detail, the gentry say, one of two things the governor-general should have done—either he should have defended the city, (an easy matter, they seem to think,) or he should have met the Barbarians and answered peaceably their demands! Neither of these has be done, and hence now their city is in ruins. They, therefore, ask Yeh Mingchin how, in silent meditation by night, he can answer, for his conduct, to the people, or to the whole empire, or to His Imperial Master, or to the late Emperor. Their questions are apposite, how can he answer?

TYFOONS.

The last few days have given unmistakable intimations that the season for these terrific storms has returned; and you, Mr. Editor, having recently drawn attention to this subject, will please allow a Traveller to refer sea-going gentlemen, especially commanders of vessels, to an able and lucid paper on Cyclones by Sir Frederic Nicolson. In referring to this paper I have two objects—the one is to show how much an individual can effect in collecting and publishing useful informations; the other is to secure for Sir Frederic's Paper the perusal of all commanders now in the China Seas. I am glad to know that so valuable a document has obtained a place in the Journal of the Shanghai Literary and Scientific Society; it should be put on sale or placed within the reach of every navigator, who desires to extend his acquaintance with the Law of Storms.

Having sailed in almost all latitudes, around both Capes, and in the Atlantic, Pacific and Indian Oceans, and read whatever I could meet with discription of whirlwinds, I am ready to declare that I have encountered no storms so terrific as the tyfoons, and have seen no descriptions of them so accurate and plain as that given by Sir Frederic. It is all so clear and well-arranged, that the reader, whether landsman, or seaman, at once comprehends the whole matter for all practicable purposes. This is the crowning excellence of the paper.

What Sir F. has done, and done so well, doubtless others may accomplish. There are great inducement for their so doing, since the safety of life and property, in large amount, may thereby be secured.

I hope, Dear Sir, that you will not cease to urge this subject on the consideration of sea-going people, and that henceforth your columns will furnish faithful details of every tyfoon that occurs in the China seas.—Yours,

VIATOR.

Shanghai, July 21st, 1858.

Accounts from Ningpo state that people are arriving there from Wang chow, with their property. They report that the rebels are gaining on that city and it is supposed they would soon take possession of it.

The Shanghai Literary and Scientific Society held its regular Monthly Meeting on Tuesday evening last. A Letter was read from M. N. Rondot of Paris, stating some remarkable facts relating to the Chinese green dye which has recently become an object of interest in Europe, and which is produced chiefly at Haening near Hangchow Bay. M. Rondot having devoted much attention to this subject has just published a Treatise on the same by order of the Lyons Chamber of Commerce and at the instigation of the French Government. M. R., who takes a lively interest in all matters touching commercial and manufacturing industry, is desirous of commencing a correspondence with the Society respecting several vegetable productions of China, which enter largely into European consumption. Much remains to be developed regarding the Botany of China; and, with the prospective encouragement offered to scientific enterprise by our new treaty stipulations, we may reasonably expect an important addition to the resources of art from the fuller investigation of the natural productions of this Empire.

M. Rondot was unanimously elected a corresponding member of the Society. R. Swinhoe, Esq., of H. B. M. Consulate at Amoy and Dr. McCartee of Ningpo were also elected corresponding members. Jas. Whittall and John Major, Esqs., were admitted members of the Society.

It was mentioned that at a meeting of the Royal Asiatic Society the project of admitting that of Shanghai as a Branch had been introduced and acceded to.

The Secretary then read a paper by Mr. Swinhoe, on a recent visit to Formosa in H. M. S. Inflexible. The objects and results of this expedition were alluded to, but as they have been so recently given in the North-China Herald, it will be needless to recapitulate them here. Mr. Swinhoe's paper was full of new and interesting matter relative to the natural history of the places he visited, and gave a very graphic account of the Coal mines at Ke-lung, where 96 tons were procured for the steamer. An inland excursion of 80 miles was made, during which the Sulphur mines were explored. There were no laborers in these mines as the mandarins from Foochow had sent soldiers to put a stop to the working of them.

Sketches of the male and female savages, met with at a village in Saw-o bay were exhibited, also a specimen of the cloth made by them, a girdle of which forms generally their only clothing.

After the reading of the paper a vote of thanks was unanimously passed to Mr. Swinhoe, coupled with a request that he would leave a copy of his paper with the Society for publication in its Journal.

(From the Daily Press, July 14.)

The Dutch bark E. W. Daw van Essell, from Swatow to Shanghae, with 14,000 pcls. Sugar, got on the banks off Swatow, and was towed off by the steamer Torywan. She was found to be leaking at the rate of 3 inches per hour, and would have to discharge.

The British ship Bernicia had been chartered at Swatow for Shanghae and back for $5,200.

The British str. Cleopatra arrived at Singapore from Amoy bound to Havana on 24th June, with 440 Coolies on board. Upwards of 40 had died on the passage and 20 had jumped overboard at Singapore, where the ship was detained for want of a crew, who had left in consequence of their time having expired.

The British ship Tasmania, Nourse, from Hongkong, arrived at Havana on 22d April, after a passage of 91 days with 260 Coolies, 143 having died on the passage.

The Spanish ship Julian de Unzueta, Arizza, arrived at Havana the same day, after a passage of 118 days with 267 Coolies, 117 having died on the passage.

By the Hellespont we have received some Calcutta papers from which we extract the following:—

The Insurrection.—Each phase of the rebellion seems to be more complicated than the last, just when it was supposed our troops might with safety take up their quarters for the rainy season intelligence is received which requires instant action. The rebels decimated at Jhansi and driven from Culpee have fled to Gwalior and there obtained fresh resources and new adherents. On the 29th of May Scindiah heard of their approach. He imagined them but the debris of the fugitives from Culpee and accordingly with two regiments of infantry, one thousand horse and eighteen guns went out to intercept them. But he had under-estimated their strength and the fidelity of his troops. For when on the 3rd of June the Maharajah encountered the enemy he found they had four thousand Cavalry, seven thousand Infantry and 12 guns. His troops seeing that they were out-numbered and having no great love for the Maharajah fought with reluctance, and as soon as the enemy had by a charge of Cavalry captured the Maharajah's guns, his troops openly sided with the rebels. A few, the body guard of the Maharajah, remained staunch and fought with great gallantry till they had lost a third of their number, two hundred out of six hundred being killed, Scindiah himself had a narrow escape being pursued by the enemy, but on the 3rd of June he was escorted into Agra by a detachment of Meade's horse. The family of the Rajah escorted by the Bazee Baee have fled in the direction of Sipree, but are hotly pursued. It is expected however that they may fall in with Brigadier Smith's advancing force and thus escape.

After the flight of the Maharajah the rebels entered Gwalior without opposition.

The Killidar with a few royal thakoors held the fort for a short time, but eventually surrendered. The rebels have thus full possession of the city and the whole country is in a complete state of disorganization. Thirty-nine of masters has completely upset all the existing regulations and rebel Goojers are reported to be plundering in all directions. All the prisoners have been liberated from the jail. Tantia Topee has been proclaimed Nanab; Rao Saheb has acquired some other dignity, and the Ranee of Jhansi retains all her importance. Thus the Mahrattas hope to recover their lost glory by electing an impostor to a Peishwa and by submitting to a woman trained with every crime.

Fortunately Sir Hugh Rose is at hand and though the rebels are in overwhelming strength and our troops have suffered much from constant exposure and harassing marches yet we do not suppose that he will delay to attack. * * *
—Friend of India, June 10.

Sir Hugh Rose who appears to have reached his force about the 9th June halted, it is said, to await the arrival of the Maharajah. Without him he feared Gwalior would be exposed to all the evils of a city taken by storm. Scindiah accordingly left Agra on the 14th, and on the 15th Sir H. Rose was at Soopoolia. Little opposition to the march appears to have been offered, the rebels clustering into Gwalior and quarrelling among themselves. The traitors who betrayed the Rajah had received a donceur of three months' pay and their arrears. The Troops from Culpee thought themselves entitled to the same reward, and demanded it on parade. Their leaders, afraid that with such an advance men fire times defeated would fly at once, hesitated, but the money was ultimately paid. Some of the sepoys began immediately to desert, and the remainder appear to have somewhat neglected the defences. On the 17th, as appears from the short Telegrams published, an action took place near Morar between the Seepree Brigade commanded by Brigadier Smith, and the advanced guard of the rebels commanded by the Ranee of Jhansie. The Ranee was killed, too good a fate for such a monster, the rebels were dispersed and four guns fell to Brigadier Smith. On the following day Sir Hugh Rose, reinforced apparently by the Seepree Brigade, attacked the city, and carried it after a battle which lasted for five hours. The rebels fled apparently in the direction of Mhow, the only route not occupied by European troops. Nothing is known of the number slain, or of the details of the engagement, Government withholding all telegrams except from the Delhi Gazette. Apparently, however, the bulk of the force escaped in tolerable order to reappear in another portion of Central India. Even with this drawback, however, the recapture is a triumph of no slight value. The rebels, by intrigue rather than battle, had seized one of the strongest places in Central India. They had driven out the Maharajah, had guns treasure, and provisions, yet failed to hold the place even for three weeks. This rapid success will be felt throughout the Mahratta states, where a race, once dominant and always hungering for excitement, need the conviction that the British Government is swift as well as strong. Some apprehension is felt for the effect of the retreat on our own provinces in Bundelcund, but we are unable to share in the apprehension. From Mhow to the West the mutineers will meet Lord Elphinstone at every turn, and except in one contingency, which we will not anticipate, the Governor has strength sufficient at his disposal.

The result of the victory has already been felt throughout the neighbouring districts. The rebel Rajah of Mynpoorie has surrendered, and the refractory Zemindars in Agra and Etawah must feel that their time is at hand. As the war rolls westward, we obtain at least time, some chance of clearing our own districts and re-establishing that dread of authority which is the only true preservative of order. A month of tranquility will do more to render incursion impossible than a dozen petty victories.

In Oude Sir Hope Grant appears to have gained a victory of some importance. He had been instructed to clear away the enemy from Nuwabgunge where they had collected in great force, and whence they menaced Lucknow. He reached the place on the 13th instant, and found himself opposed to the Baiti Brigade by large bodies of sepoys and fighting men with several guns. The passage of the stream was soon secured, as it was defended by sepoys. The rabble, however, are said to have fought well, standing up under a heavy fire in the open plain, and meeting the Rifles hand to hand. They were at last dispersed after a loss of three hours, leaving 600 men and 7 guns upon the field. The victory relieves Lucknow in this direction, and the column it is understood will remain some time at Fuwabgunge. The Kapoorthulla Rajah has arrived, but his followers do not yet appear to have been employed.

Kouer Singh's men appear to have attempted to regain their old position in Oude. Sir E. Lugard with his force, greatly weakened by the sun, has marched towards Buxar, and the Bhojpoorees have contrived in their dispersion to throw whole districts into panic. One body threatens Gya, which indeed is reported—we believe inaccurately—to have been taken. Another has rendered Chuprah unsafe for the hour. A third is plundering factories and small villages in Buxar. A fifth, which may however belong to a different body, disturbs Ghazeepore, and has compelled Col. Cumberlege to advance. Genl. Frank's old foe, the Chuckladar Mahomed Hoossein has reappeared in Goruckpore, but retreated in presence of a small force of Europeans and Sikhs. All this is most disheartening, but it must not be forgotten that the actual number of the enemy is very few. The best policy perhaps would be to allow them to reach Fyzabad, where they would merge in the great body of rebels who await at that station the punishment better weather will enable us to inflict.

The latest items of news will be found in the subjoined telegraphic messages, communicated to the Press by Government:—

"Service Message from G. F. Edmonstone, dated Allahabad, 21st June, 8.5 P.M.

Intelligence has been received from Dholepore of the capture of Ameerchand Bade, Scindia's traitorous Treasurer at Jowra, by a part of——Tantia Topee and the Nawab of Banda as usual, quitted Gwalior before the final contest, and are said to be on their way to Subulghur and Jeypore. They have four heavy guns, and three Horse Artillery guns. Brigadier General Napier is in pursuit."

"Service Message from Sir R. Hamilton, dated Gwalior, 21st June.

Scindiah yesterday entered the city and occupied the palace. His reception by the people was very gratifying. The Fort is occupied by British troops. All is quite right. The Baxee Baie and ladies of his family joined the Maharajah yesterday."—Singapore Daily Times, July 5.

MANNING THE NAVY.

However much the persistency of Sir C. Napier in pressing his motion on Tuesday evening may have disconcerted politicians eager to decide the fate of a Ministry, the importance of the subject was not inferior to that of the Indian debate. No time is out of season for an inquiry whether the naval force of the country is adequate for our defence at all times and in any eventuality. Least of all is such a question inopportune when it is acknowledged that the means available in ordinary times for manning any considerable number of additional ships have, for many years past, been so deficient as to cause just uneasiness in the minds of those who are best able, from official and professional experience, to form an opinion on the subject. It is true that on the breaking out of the Russian war we were able, at very short notice, to send out two magnificent fleets to the Baltic and the Black Sea; and we have no doubt that on any emergency the spirit and energy of the country would justify Sir John Pakington's tone of confident reliance. But a good navy seaman is not manufactured in a day, and it is not fitting that Great Britain should place her ships in the hands of raw levies, who cannot be expected to rival the efficiency of regularly-trained sailors. What we need is to have at all times an adequate body of experienced seamen, to whom the protection of our coasts may be left without a particle of doubt or anxiety. The Channel is our single line of defence—the crews of our ships are almost the only substantial garrison we possess—and no pains should be spared, nor, if necessary, any expenditure grudged, to maintain the constant efficiency of our solitary bulwark.

Much has been done in the last few years to provide a ready supply of seamen for any sudden demand; but much still remains to be done before we can rely on our ability to man our ships as rapidly as circumstances may render desirable. The Committee of Naval Officers who reported on the subject in 1853, recommended several important changes, from which much fruit has already been gathered, and more may fairly be expected. The re-organization of the Coast Guard force and the establishment of a Volunteer Naval Militia have given us a reserve of 12,000 efficient men, who may be transferred to the navy at a moment's notice. The numbers of the volunteers and the popularity of the service are said to be increasing, and it is satisfactory to find that the value of this resource is fully appreciated by those who have the control of our naval administration. The system of recruiting sailors as continuous service men adds further to the means at our disposal, though at some increase to the cost of the service; but every day confirms the opinion of the Committee of 1853, that the navy of the Merchant service cannot be relied on to furnish any considerable number of men on short notice. The rough-and-ready device of the pressgang is exploded as barbarous; and the scheme of Sir Charles Napier for calling out the merchant seamen according to a regular rotation, savours overmuch of the conscription by which foreign navies are manned, and would be difficult to work successfully in this country. It is to volunteers that we must trust, and it is idle to disguise the fact that sailors who have been accustomed to the laxer discipline and higher pay of the commercial navy are not much disposed to enter into the Queen's fleet. Sir John Pakington, in consenting to a Commission, dwelt upon the importance of finding means for making the mercantile marine more available for manning the navy, and one can scarcely doubt that additional inducements would succeed in attracting far larger numbers into the service of the country. But, large as is the number of our merchant vessels, the sailors of them, at any one time, form a comparatively small body from which to draw recruits. The army serjeant has a population of millions on whom to work by promises of bounty and the attractions of a military career. The class to whom a navy captain has to look for his crew is counted only by thousands, and it must, in the nature of things, be a comparatively slow process to tempt any large number to adopt a new and more adventurous service. We shall probably never be able safely to dispense with a numerous reserve force in some shape or other, on which to call in a moment of pressure; and all the suggestions made in the course of the recent debate point at some modification of this system.

Sir Charles Napier's proposal is what it always has been—a permanent Channel fleet, and we are not sure that we can dispense with this, the surest of all possible reserves. According to the sanguine Admiral, it would cost little in comparison with the advantages which it would secure. In order to add to the extent of the force without any corresponding increase of expense, he suggests that the marines might be sent on shore in time of peace to do garrison duty, and their places supplied by additional seamen on board the ships. If affairs became threatening, the marines would again go afloat, and relieve a large number of sailors who would be available for other ships. At the same time the duties on shore would be performed by the militia embodied on the outbreak of war. Lord C. Paget suggested other expedients based on the same principle as that which has been found so efficient in the present arrangements with the militia

For both large or small bore the PRITCHETT BULLET, as adopted by H. M. Government, without cup or plug, is found most serviceable—very numerous testimonials having been received of its range and truth of flight. To the manufacture of SWORDS also, great attention is paid, the most efficient proof of strength and spring being applied, a guarantee given of the quality of the blade, which is uniformly tested by powerful machinery in the presence of the purchaser, before made up.
